Six short-term rental apartment management companies team up to offer free of charge the accommodation they manage to doctors and nurses engaged in the fight against Coronavirus in major Italian cities from north to south.

Milan, March 16, 2020 - Altido, CleanBnB, Halldis, Italianway, Sweetguest and Wonderful Italy, six of the main Italian companies managing short-term rental apartments, have signed an agreement to support the effort of medical and nursing staff committed to fighting the spread of Coronavirus and contribute, with its professional management activities, to the dramatic moment that the country is experiencing.

The six companies in fact make the apartments they manage in Milan, Padua, Venice, Bologna, Turin, Genova, Florence, Rome, Naples, Palermo, Syracuse and Catania available to doctors and nurses directly involved in the hospital treatment of Coronavirus. The cost of renting the properties will be totally absorbed by the sponsoring companies, which will ask guests only for the contribution for final cleaning and sanitization. In addition, the sponsoring companies have also informed the regional health institutions of the initiative.

“The feeling of national unity that we are witnessing in these days is a sign of a country and a people who do not want to give up on anything, and we professionals in the short-term rental market want to make our contribution. Not only an initiative, but a concrete gesture of closeness and encouragement for a category, that of doctors and nurses, who is struggling every day without stopping. They are the real heroes to be supported at the most in these very intense and crucial days for the life of many Italian citizens. We take inspiration from them so as not to stop and improve what we have built today, in view of the future recovery of Italian tourism ". Said Davide Ravalli, Altido Co-Founder & Head of M&A.
